And on tour to Newcastle Emllyn, Wales

A bit of the absurd plot to entice: Aubrey is an aristocrat of "artistic temperament." We see him eating scones and drinking tea late in the morning, leisure personified. Then comes the post, all letters from angry creditors or their shysters. Then, a bit of luck. His brother is dead and has left him tons of money. Unfortunately, as soon as he should get it, he would have to pay off the debts – a most unappealing thought. What to do? Why, fake your death, suggests Louise, his wily wife. And so he does – several times under several different pretenses and personas. But he's not the only faker, his butler is also up to some mischief. Hilarious confusion is the result.
